INTRODUCTION

SINCE its foundation in 1896, with the exception of the years of the first Great War, and until 1940, the Carnegie Institute presented annually as the event of Founder's Day—the commemoration of the gift of Carnegie Institute by Andrew Carnegie to the City of Pittsburgh—an International Exhibition of Contemporary Paintings.

In 1940, in its place, the Institute offered a Survey of American Painting, which reviewed the story past and present of American art. This year the exhibition is entitled "Directions in American Painting." It may be said to be forward-looking.

"Directions in American Painting" is a radical departure from the usual exhibition of American paintings, and it is an adventure into new fields on the part of Carnegie Institute. It should be indicated at once that the exhibition involves exclusively the participation of living American artists whose paintings have never appeared in a Carnegie International and, on the other hand, the exclusion of a very large number of well-known and well-established artists who have been represented at least once in a Carnegie International. In order to keep the records straight, the organization of the show, its scope and purpose require a word of explanation.

In each International there was, naturally, a division devoted to American painting. This section was limited, of necessity, to about one hundred paintings. From 1931 on, these paintings were invited. Before that time, for the American section, a small number of pictures were added to the invited ones by a Jury of Admission from paintings submitted to it by American artists who felt that they were entitled to a place in the International. The Jury of Admission solved, in a limited way, the problem of the emerging of the young, the rising, the unknown, and the unacclaimed artists. It was the thought of the Fine Arts Committee of the Carnegie Institute and the staff of the Department of Fine Arts that these artists deserved special consideration in an exhibition at Carnegie Institute devoted exclusively to them, and so "Directions in American Painting" was organized.

The show is made up of 302 paintings by 302 living American artists. These paintings were selected by a Jury of Admission from 4,812 canvases submitted to it by artists, citizens of the United States, who have never exhibited in a Carnegie International.

The exhibition is frankly experimental and has as its main object the discovery and revelation of new talent in American art. If the names of only a small number of American artists emerge and their works become known through this show, then the exhibition will be justified and will have attained its objective.

Series: The purpose of this series is to make available those catalogues that have lasting interest through their text or their illustrations. Catalogues and cumulations of titles in the series are available from the publishers.

Serial numbers: Each title is identified by a three part serial number. The first part of the serial number designates the sales list in which the title was first announced. The second part indicates the agent of publication, i.e. the museum, gallery or organisation that was responsible for the publication of the catalogue. The third part of the serial number is the number allotted to that title.
